

Crede

“Crede” is the local dialect term for the clay-laden soil that characterizes the vineyards in the municipality of Valdobbiadene where the grapes used to produce this Prosecco Superiore are chosen.

These ancient slopes were once covered by the sea and later formed by the slow movement of the land arching up and inclining the strata vertically. This ground allows the water to be stored close to the roots of the vines avoiding the effects of drought. In this way the grapes become enriched with the noble acids that emanate the elegant and delicate floral notes.

Glera

This clay-laden soil allows the water to be stored close to the roots of the vines, guaranteeing constant hydration. In this way the grapes become enriched with the noble natural substances which endow this wine with delightful floral notes.

A fresh and elegant aroma from which the fragrance of wildflowers comes to the forefront alongside delicate nuances of apples and pears.
